What's New @ the Library?

If you've visited the library's web site recently, you've already seen one thing that's new. Web designers have been busy this summer and fall giving the library web page a new look. You'll find things arranged a little differently, hopefully making our site more user-friendly, along with a completely new look. Most of the content remains the same except for the regular updating of resources.

Several databases have undergone major re-designs and enhancements. The primary recipient of complete redesign is Gale's Resource Center family. Opposing Viewpoints In Context, Science in Context and Biography in Context all replace their Resource Center counterparts and have been upgraded to reflect the addition of media-rich content through more than 1,800 Web-like topic pages, convenient user tools such as interactive maps, Web 2.0 sharing, and ReadSpeaker text-to-speech technology.

The library has also enhanced its e-book collection with psychology titles through the American Psychological Association. Students can find these titles by searching the PsycBOOKS database. In addition to the APA titles, students will also find new health-related e-books that have been added to the collection. These titles may be found by searching the online catalog or by following the e-books link from the library homepage.
